Butterfly Maiden, 2001
Scamp, 2001

These works are on loan from the collection of the multimedia artist, who has worked in nearly every medium. They are listed in order from left to right.

Elbert Weinberg, Salome, 1968

Weinberg’s elegant sculpture was the first acquisition of the Brockton Art Center – Fuller Memorial (now Fuller Craft Museum). The bronze form echoes the influence of French sculptor August Rodin and the Art Nouveau period of the 19th and 20th centuries.

Alfred Duca, St. Francis, 1958

This work by Alfred Duca was a gift from the Stephen and Sybil Stone Foundation in 1971. This piece and its fine detailing were crafted from bronze.

Leo Sewell, Duck, 2003

A self-proclaimed junk sculptor, Leo Sewell composed Duck with various reclaimed objects, each one selected for its texture, shape, durability, and patina. Sewell continues to fashion artwork of all sizes from refuse, from a life-size housecat to a 40-foot installation.

Linda Hoffman, Just Sitting, 2018

These five diminutive, seated figures are rooted in Hoffman’s daily meditation practice as a Zen Buddhist. The placement of the figures allows the reflection of the sky in the water, enhancing the magic and mystery of the sculpture.

This work by Jim Cole was a gift from Charles & Maples Stamm in 2015.
Phillips evokes images of Zen stone gardens through his use of boulders as sculptural materials for sculpture. The stones are manipulated, rearranged, and reconstructed as objects themselves.

Wheelwright's work is primarily made from natural materials such as stones, trees, and bones. Sweet Face comes from one of his series featuring faces carved into large pieces of granite.

This work serves as a memorial to Joe Beasly Riley who was a Brockton resident and friend of Fuller Craft Museum until his passing in 2007.

Lang's creative practice spanned multiple media, from found object, kinetic sculpture to large scale public art. The Question is the Answer was displayed at Framingham’s Danforth Museum before being acquired by Fuller Craft Museum in 2017.

The stones are manipulated, rearranged, and reconstructed as objects themselves.

McGoff uses multiple straight lines of red cedar to create a continuously flowing double-curved form. The sculpture is named after the Greek mythological figure Daedalus who was the father of Icarus.

X's and O's #2 was inspired by the artist's observations of two sticks of butter in the microwave and the mesmerizing way in which they melted into each other.

Glace Bay celebrates the Industrial Revolution through its heavy, dark appearance and many wheels representing machinery and travel. The name refers to a town in East Cape Breton, Nova Scotia which ran twelve successful coal mines at its peak.

Meneses intended for Sight to both contrast and coexist with the outdoor environments, relying on the rust that naturally forms on the surface to preserve the work.

Meneses is a well-respected metal artist who strives to contradict and manipulate steel by rolling, bending, cutting, and placing it to suggest energy and potential for movement.

This piece was created as a memorial to Jennifer Atkinson, who served as Curator and Director of Fuller Craft Museum until her passing in 2003.

Dewart is an American sculptor whose work exudes grace, serenity, strength, and confidence through its muscular forms and captivating materials.

McGoff uses multiple straight lines of red cedar to create a continuously flowing double-curved form. The sculpture is named after the Greek mythological figure Daedalus who was the father of Icarus.

X's and O's #2 was inspired by the artist's observations of two sticks of butter in the microwave and the mesmerizing way in which they melted into each other.

Glace Bay celebrates the Industrial Revolution through its heavy, dark appearance and many wheels representing machinery and travel. The name refers to a town in East Cape Breton, Nova Scotia which ran twelve successful coal mines at its peak.

Dewart is an American sculptor whose work exudes grace, serenity, strength, and confidence through its muscular forms and captivating materials.